Poetry.

God bless our Native Land.

God bless our native land;
Firm may she ever stand;
Through storm and night!
When the wild tempests rave,
Ruler of wind and wave,
Do thou our country save,
By thy great might!

For her our prayers shall rise,
To God above the skies;
On him we wait.
Lord hear our nation's cry;
Be thou forever nigh;
May Freedom never die;
God save the state!

Miscellany.

From the Vermont Christian Messenger.

Right Shall Conquer.

There is a trite saying worthy of being often repeated, and ever safe to introduce into practical life: "Be sure you are right and then go ahead." If any enterprise is contemplated by the Christian, especially when he is conscious that he must meet stern opposition, due deliberation and prayer should be exercised, to determine fully the rightfulness of the measure. When fully convinced of the right—that the enterprise is for the glory of God and the best interests of his cause, there should be no hesitation in seeking its accomplishment. But caution should be exercised not to seek to do that which of itself is right, by the use of wrong means. The prosecution of such a measure may require great sacrifices. It may meet with violent opposition from the selfishness, passions, and prejudices of men, but the right is destined to triumph.

"Truth, exalted to earth, shall rise again:
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers."

The stern demands of principle should never be bent to the dictates of worldly expediency, and we need never fear the final triumph of a righteous cause. We can better afford to sacrifice life, than to save life by the sacrifice of principle. The devoted martyr need not fear the pains of martyrdom. He is to rejoice and be exceeding glad when persecuted for righteousness' sake. We have long expected that the great principle recognized by our fathers, and published to the world in our declaration of independence, never could fully triumph in our country short of yet another desperate and bloody struggle. A portion of our country have based their financial interests upon the antagonism of this declaration of man's inalienable rights. We had not expected that the struggle which had been so long maturing, would so suddenly darken the heavens with the gloomy cloud of civil war. But the elements are now all astir, and contending thousands may soon be in deadly strife upon the bloody field of battle. If our fathers were right in the principles and measures which they adopted to secure our national independence, then we are right in seeking to maintain them. If God blessed them in that memorable struggle, we may hope for his protection still. If they could pray in confidence, and hope for the triumph of these principles, then may we not do the same now? As God gave them the victory, may we not hope for such a result now? We have no doubt of our national triumph, and our confidence is not based upon the millions we may number in our armies, the strength of our navy, or the resources of our country, so much as in the justice and righteousness of our cause. The right shall conquer. Who can doubt that slavery and treason are wrong? Our hearts bleed when we think of the sacrifice of human life which the struggle may cost us, but we do not tremble for the final results. God will vindicate our cause, and our national banner must still float in triumph. It is a time of darkness, and the national pulse is throbbing at fever heat, and startling news runs along upon our telegraphic wires—but let us trust in God and hope for the best. In any struggle, if those who contend for the right find themselves in the minority, and a fearful odds is against them, they need not despair of success, for those who contend against the right, contend against God. A consciousness of the right of our cause may throw the light of hope on the darkest night of earthly adversity and misfortune. One has appropriately said:

"In this world we are often discouraged.— Everything looks gloomy. The plans which we have formed with care topple over and fall.— Circumstances weave a web around us from which we cannot move. We exclaim with one of old—'He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out.'"

At such times we are prone to act by the law of expediency. Instead of thinking "is this right?" we say in our frailty, "will this look well in the eyes of our neighbor?" Forgetful that God looketh on the heart, and not on the outward appearance, we take that course which will bring honor in the sight of men; at the beginning this may seem the easier path. The first trends upon flowers. Flattery sings her delusive songs; temptation spreads gilded nets in the way, but we see them not. By-and-by the way grows thorny; clouds, dark and ominous, gather round. Whatever of hope brightened, is now darkened in the gathering gloom. The fair superstructure, reared upon a frail foundation, is swept away by a single wind of divine justice. Right always bears away the palm of victory at last; unseen hands help along the chariot of truth; angelic wings rustle around it. God himself helps the right, and they who struggle to maintain it have the Savior for their captain. Though the heart may sometimes quiver, and the light of faith flicker, yet triumph awaits those who are true to the last.

Alike may the lofty and the lowly remember this, and take comfort. The little child needs to think of it, when restraints seem unreasonable, and duties become irksome. The rich in his palace halls, the poor beneath his humble roof, may recall it in seasons of perplexity.— Prosperity sometimes makes us selfish and unthoughtful. Adversity sometimes drives us to skepticism and recklessness. But if we only cleave to the right through varying scenes, the right will conquer.

No motto on earth is a better one for heroes. It was a firm belief in this which drew from Luther his noble replies at the Diet of Worms. It was the recollection of this which cheered the glorious old John Bunyan in the long hours of his confinement in Bedford jail. It was this which kept and keeps many an earnest worker on the fields of missionary labor. Through every discouragement they have thought of the Captain's eye gazing on them, of the Savior's heart enfolding them, of the arms everlasting awaiting them. They have known that only the "right shall conquer."

Many a life that passes away in quiet obscurity is sublime with this grand faith. The mother, weary with manifold cares, as she gathers her lambs around her at nightfall, the father coming from labor, with weary foot and aching brow, the little child rocking the cradle for a neighbor, that she may earn her missionary money for the Sunday-school treasury—all these know, though perhaps their lips never uttered it, that right shall conquer.

Sometimes are like comets; very brilliant for a while, and leaving a long track of splendor wherever they are. Others shine with steady lustre, like the rush-light upon the cottage hearth. All these lives are useful, each in its own degree, giving glory to God. Whenever their illuminating power does battle with surrounding darkness, they are witnesses that only the light shall bear away the crown.

APPROPRIATE.—A telegram from Richmond tells us that "the secessionists celebrated the passage of the Act of Secession by the Convention by placing a negro astride the statue of Washington in the Capitol," as a type of the new order of things. A more appropriate emblem could not have been devised: "a negro astride the statue of Washington" exactly expresses modern Virginia, where the breeding of slaves for sale engrosses the greater part of the capital, and where it is demanded that the independence won by Washington, and recognized in our constitution, should all be made to bear up and protect the system of Slavery.

THE FLAG OF SUMTER.—We see by the New York papers that the old flag of Sumter, which the men of the little garrison, now staying at Governor's Island, have in their possession, is the object of special attention. We were going to say almost of adoration. Let these seventy men, who so nobly bore up against the fire of seven thousand, have their flag. Major Anderson, we saw it stated, expresses the wish that when he dies he may be buried in the old Sumter flag. To this his men assent, "but till our Major dies," they declare, "we must keep the flag with us." Glorious flag! glorious men! may they live to see the stars and stripes waving, as heretofore over every fort of the Government on this continent!

TRANSFER.—Dr. Cooke, late President of Appleton University, has been transferred to the New-England Conference and stationed at Harvard-street, Cambridge.

Literary Notices.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF MONTPELIER, from the time it was first chartered in 1781, to the year 1860. Written in accordance with a vote of the town. By Hon. D. P. Thompson. Montpelier: E. P. Walton. On sale at the Freeman Book-Store.

The character of this interesting work is fully described above. Judge Thompson is known as an author who has a peculiar faculty to entertain his readers, and in this work shows himself adapted to detail the stern realities of life. Here may be found the history of the struggles and deprivations of the early settlers of the town, and its growth to its present position as Capital of the State. It contains an excellent portrait of Hon. S. Prentiss, and the value of the work is greatly enhanced by brief biographical sketches of the most noted of the deceased citizens of the town.

We commend it to all who are seeking a monthly filled with moral and religious reading at once pleasing and instructive.

NEWBURY SEMINARY AND FEMALE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

The examination closing the Spring Term of this institution commenced Monday, April 29th and closed Wednesday, May 1st.

The term has been a decided success, the examination being taken for its index.

The classes in Natural Mental and Moral Sciences appeared well and left the assurance that they had given careful attention to their work.

The classical department has embraced a much larger number than usual, and the evidence of thorough drill and study was very satisfactory.

The Ornamental department, under the direction of its accomplished Teacher, made a fine display, indicating much good taste and skill.

Vocal and Instrumental Music have received much attention, and the proficiency in this department evinced a high order of talent and instruction.

The concert on Wednesday eve., under the direction of Prof. French, was esteemed by those in attendance to have reflected much credit upon the Seminary Glee Club.

The address on Tuesday eve., before the "Band" and other literary societies, by E. O. Haven, D. D., of Boston—Theme, "The White Races of America,"—was a graphic, rare delineation of the origin, character and tendencies of the American people.

The present able and laborious Faculty, are to remain in the institution. There has been the usual religious interest during the term.

The National Flag floats upon the Seminary building, and the display of the white, red and blue leaves no doubt of the feeling of all in this hour of national peril, some of the students being already enrolled and hastening to the defence of the nation's flag and honor.

The pleasant location and established reputation of this institution must render it as in time past a desirable resort for those in the pursuit of useful knowledge and mental discipline.

H. K. CONN,

Secretary of the Com. of Examination.

PROMPT ACTION.—The Buffalo Advocate, which displays the American flag over its editorial head, in urging the importance of decisive action on the part of the government says:

"To submit to the insulting demands of a few Southern slave-drivers, is to exchange our boasted independence for the meanest Slavery. For our Government not to act now with promptitude and energy, is to manifest before the world the worst imbecility.— It is to confess that the Constitution of the United States is a soap bubble. If civil war must come, then we say, let it be an earnest one! Let the chastening rod descend with a will."

Prentice says there is a terrible war feeling throughout the whole country. Even the new-born infants are all in arms.
